“ It's hard to believe it's been another year. I always think of you when I listen to Jim O'rourke and other Chicago bands that you got me into when we first met in 1999. Sometimes you just pop into my head for the most random reasons. Miss you, Brian.

“ You are now 7 years gone but by no means forgotten. Thanks for the years of memories, music, and laughter. You were truly one of a kind, Brian Hoyne.

“ If my math is correct, you would have just turned 46. I still think of you quite often, especially now since I just moved back to Seattle. In some of our old stomping grounds I see you everywhere, each corner, intersection, or stretch of sidewalk contains a memory.

I wish I could wind the clock back and spend an afternoon in Fremont at the Dubliner, sharing a pitcher. Or playing music in your old attic room up at the Queen Anne house. We were young, life was grand, and anything seemed possible.

See you on the other side.

“ It's now 6 years and a day since you've been gone, Brian. You remain in my thoughts. I found some old pictures of you that I thought I'd post here. One of the is from when your parents came to Seattle for a visit and we all went out to Pike's Place Market.

I wish you were still around. You were one of the good ones.

“ Happy birthday, Brian. Thank you for being mine and Ben's first and best friend in Seattle. It's hard to believe that was over two decades ago.

I've heard it said that you live as long as the last person that remembers you. In that respect, you are still here, because I carry you and Ben with me every day.

Sleep well, old friend.

“ Brian was an old and good friend from Seattle. We spent a lot of time together at one point, he and Julien and I. He will always be such a beautiful and formative part of my youth. We loved to talk about and listen to music, and I was always so eager to hear what he was working on, because he was so talented and interesting. I also took a lot of photos of him, because he was so handsome, and he would let me photograph him. I have and will continue to cherish my photos of him.

We hadn't been in touch the last couple years, despite my efforts to find him, but I'd heard he was doing well, and that made me glad.

My heart goes out to Brian's family, I can't imagine how hard and painful this is. Brian was a wonderful, funny, talented kind-hearted, smart person, and I'm so very glad I knew him.

“ Brian was unlike anybody I've ever known. He was good at just about anything he put his mind to. He was the first drummer of our band Shoes for December clear back in 1999 when he worked at a deli in Seattle and even recorded on our album years later. Razor sharp wit and a heart of gold. I'll never in this life meet another like him. He was very kind, generous, and had a sense of humor that was unmatched. I miss him and will never forget him. He was one of a kind.

“ Brian was so richly creative. He had a great talent in music . He was very kind and peaceful.

I pray your hearts are filled with peace and comfort during this hard time. He was far too young. Gods peace!

“ Brian and I were good friends and, for quite some time, roommates at a house in Queen Anne in Seattle. We played in a band together called Shoes for December. He was our first drummer. He was so talented.

Brian is the one who told me, clear back in 1999, to never ever use a PC, only a Mac.

He is the one who taught me what good beer actually tasted like. We used to go down to our favorite pub called the Dubliner with our friend Ben and share pitchers and then go practice music in his attic room.

He loved technology. I remember him showing me this new little gadget he bought called an mp3 player that could hold up to 100 songs. My god were we impressed. He showed it to everybody.

He loved to cook and would always tell me the ingredients that were in pretty much anything he ate. When I first met him he was working at the deli in MarketTime in Fremont (Seattle). He used to hate it when people would order hot dog and macaroni casserole, as he thought that was the most disgusting thing a person could ever consume.

He worked at a coffee shop for quite awhile at a kind of high end coffee shop. He used to always tell me to drop by and he'd hook me up with free lattes.

Brian was not just an amazing drummer but also an amazing guitar player. He had a razor sharp wit and sarcastic sense of humor but with a big heart.

I had not seen him in a couple years. I had heard he moved back to Tennessee but, despite many attempts, I was unable to find out how to contact him. I wish I would have tried harder.

He was one of my best friends and will be missed and never forgotten.
