“ I met Eve at our son's baseball game. Immediately I knew she was my kinda girl when she shouted and threatened the umpire for making a bad call against her son. Lol it made it funnier that she was 100lbs soaking wet. She was fearless. Me and her immediately became close. Sat together at every game and screamed and cheered as a team. Our friendship became a sisterhood and I quickly learned that Eve was one of a kind kinda friend. She spoke her mind (even if she shared too much info sometimes lol) she worked hard as a single mom, she was at every game and every practice, she was at all my kids games and bday parties. She showed up for me in all areas of my life. She became the person I wanted to be. A hard working mom that didn't need anything but her kids. She lit up the room everywhere we went. She made me laugh when I thought I couldn't go on. She encouraged me to be a better person. She was the one person I could count on when the world walked out on me. I found out with her passing, just how many people feel the same way about my friend. I have received so many messages of personal experiences that others had with her like, "I met her at the gas station and she helped me get some gas" or "I met her at Daddy Billy's while watching a band play and she was the life of the party" or "she stopped to check on me and talk to me when I was walking my neighborhood streets feeling alone and hopeless". Her light has been passed on thru so many people just because she took the time to see people. She actually seen you for who you are. She loved like she wanted to be loved and she genuinely cared for people. She taught me to laugh at myself again and not to take everything so seriously. I'll never forget my friend and her undeniable light that she spread everywhere she went. I hope more people remember her for that and that more people continue to pass her kindness on. The world would be alot better place today if there were more people like her. I love you Eve. I'll see you again my friend. ❤️
